The Catholic School Closing.

Natvstanding the stormy weather, a large audience gathered in the Hall of the school connected with the Church of the Sacred Heart, Wednesday evening, the occasion being the closing exercises of the school. At the appointed hour one of the pupils took her position at the piano and commenced playing a march. The signal being given by one of the teachers, about 60 boys, arranged according to size, and about the same number of girls, dressed in white, marched up the centre aisle of the Hall and gathered on the stage, where they all joined in singing the opening chorus entitled "Greeting Glee." They then marched to seats assigned them in the front part of the Hall.

A humorous dialogue entitled, "Who is to Blame, in which master and servant might be termed 'sixes,' afforded much amusement to the audience. A duet entitled "The Wind and the Harp" was well rendered by two girl pupils.

The Pensive Queen, a dialogue in two acts, in which a number of girls participated and which was designed to teach a number of moral lessons, was well carried out, two of the characters, the servant and a mischievous maid, especially distinguishing themselves. A solo, "Some day I'll wander back again, sung by a little boy was loudly applauded.

One of the most effective scenes of the evening was the march around the May Pole. A pillar was erected in the centre of the stage, and attached to its top were long strips of different colored material resembling ribbon. Eight of the largest girls took hold of these strips and formed a circle as far from the pillar as the bands of ribbon would allow. Under this canopy a circle of smaller girls, dressed in fancy colors, decorated with bells and spangles, and carrying waltzes of flowers, was formed. Keeping time with the music of the piano, these little girls performed a circuitous march and executed several figures, finally gathering close to the base of the pillar. The larger girls then marched and counter-marched around the pillar, entwining the various colored ribbons about it in regular form and presenting a beautiful scene. Reversing the order of march the ribbons were unwound and the canopy again formed, while the curtain went down amid the enthusiastic applause of the audience.

The National Guard was a regimental drill accompanied by singing, and was performed by a company of boys in uniform. Their marching displayed careful training and was well executed. A recitation by one of the girls entitled "Death makes all men Brothers," was effectively rendered. In the chorus "See-Saw," rendered by the school, a regular see-saw was erected on the platform, with two little girls on one end and two little boys on the other, they went up and down keeping time with the music. A dialogue in which the traditional trials of the little school children were portrayed, was well performed by a company of little girls. An operetta entitled "Grandma's Birthday," in which the school participated, was highly appreciated.

The entertainment closed with a chorus by the school entitled "Gently Sighs the Breeze," and the audience dispersed expressing themselves well pleased with the evening's performance.

At intervals in the program, the pastor of the church read the reports of the school for the past term. At the close he made an address and distributed diplomas to the following scholars: Gertrude O'Brien, William Vaughn, Rosa Noone, Michael Gleason, Aggie Quinn, John Durr, Ella Kieley, Lizzie Finnegan.

A large number of specimens of plain and fancy needle work done by the scholars was placed on exhibition.

Strange Uses of Paper.

One of the most remarkable uses of paper is the building of paper boats, under the patent, recently expired, of F. Waters of Lansingburg, near Troy, N. Y. These boats are made of ordinary manilla paper of good quality, usually in five thicknesses, in one sixteenth of an inch thick, except in parts where there is reinforcement of one or two extra strips. The process of making them is simple. A model of soft pine is made the full size of the boat, the bow and being of two pieces which can be detached. The paper is delivered in long rolls; the model is turned upside down on a long frame; one narrow strip of paper and then a second are first laid on where the keel would be, and then one, two, three, four, five sheets are successively laid along and molded close to the model, each as it is put on being coated with shellac and with glue to attach the next sheet closely to it. Thus done up in paper, the models are taken to a drying-room, where a heat of about 150 deg. F., continued for five days, consolidates the glued paper into a solid mass. The movable pieces of wood at the bow are unscrewed and taken out, and with this piece for a start it is as easy to peel the boat off the model, as peach-skin off a fresh peach. A keel is now fastened inside the boat, several extra layers of shellac are put on outside and inside, a strip of wood is fastened in for a gunwale, and the shell is presently ready for its seats and outriggers. They are mostly racing shells, from single scull up to eight-oar, but one boat has been built as large as forty-two feet long by four feet four inches beam, to hold forty-two persons, this of course, being stayed by wooden ribs; and a steam-launch nineteen feet long, worked by one-horse power oil engine, boat and engine together weighing but 430 lbs., was last Fall successfully run at a speed of about ten miles per hour on the upper Hudson. The cost is something above that of wood. The single scull, 21½ feet long by 10½ inches beam, costs from $65 to $100; the eight-oared shell, about sixty feet long by twenty-four inches wide costs $400. It is an interesting fact that the racing shells of Harvard, Yale and Columbia in 1887 were all from the same model from this shop, so that the contest was entirely one of skill on even terms.—Harper's Magazine.

Solace for the Aged.

One of the lamentations of age is that no new friendships are formed. It is a rather mournful fact that most persons who pass 50 years lose the gift of pleasing. The sparkling eye, the merry laugh, the hearty speech, the sympathetic manner are all gone, and in place of these a guarded bearing and a sober habit of thought and judgment. Good-looking young people, with their pleasant faces and enthusiasm, win friends offhand, but the saddened and mature man gets more and more isolated. Those of his own kind give only what they receive, and the young shrink from him. He has lost the glow of youth and the conquering vivacity of youth. He estimates the pursuits of life with frigid skepticism, and those who still delight to collect the dust in the race course are offended at him. He may be ever so just and kind, but his exterior bears the scars of pain, and the average man or woman instinctively draws away from an invalid. If he be wise he will fall back upon his books and a fishing rod in season and make friends in heaven, for his chance of making any down here is decidedly slender. Good tobacco and a clean briar root pipe will also be found an excellent substitute for human affections.
